Overview. In the 21st century, the status of Western liberal democracy appears under threat at home and abroad. While populist movements gain ground in Europe and North America, the rising economic and diplomatic clout of non-democratic regimes like China and Russia presents the world with seemingly successful alternatives. In this course, the questions we will return to time and again are: what is democracy? Why is democracy worth defending? And what institutions and social conditions are necessary for the realization of the democratic ideal? The lecture course will be divided into two parts. The first half of the course will provide students with an overview of the development of democratic thought, ranging from liberal democracy to more recent radical and deliberative alternatives. The second half of the course will consider if and how considerations like economic growth, inequality and multiculturalism present a challenge for the democratic ideal.

Prerequisites. A good foundational knowledge of general political science concepts, theories, and basic qualitative and quantitative methods is expected. Moreover, students should be able to understand and express themselves in English, as this will be the classroom language – though perfection is neither expected nor required. The final exam will also be in English.

Assessment. Your grade in this class will be based on a written examination (date and time TBD). For the exam, students should be familiar with all topics and texts covered during the course, and will be asked to answer one or more short essay questions. More information on format and content will be provided closer to the date.

Required Readings. Course materials will be made available to enrolled students via ILIAS. Students will be expected to have completed all the assigned readings for the week before each session.
